

Dr Laith Al-Jobouri is an Associate Professor, University Lead for Digital Transformation and Emergent Technologies and University Senate at Abertay University. Dr Laith is also the Network Capability Lead for the CoSTAR – National Lab. and a member of the Expert Working Group for the UK Telecoms Innovation Network. In addition, he is leading, principal investigator and Co-investigator for several research projects that focus on 5G technologies and applications, cyber security, IoT, mixed reality and virtual productions.

After obtaining his B.Sc. in Electrical and Electronic Engineering and his M.Sc. degree in Electronic and Communications Engineering, he worked in R&D for wireless communication. Then after receiving his PhD and Post-Doc in Electronic Systems Engineering, he decided to work in the UK Higher Education sector and obtained his Fellowship in Higher Education (FEHA). During his work in academia, he has supervised and examined PhD students nationally and internationally.

Dr Laith has more than 27 years of experiences in leadership, management, teaching, research, R&D and consultation in both academia and industry and has won different national and international awards. Before start working in academia, Dr Laith has worked with Siemens Telecommunications for mobile technology infrastructure, and he was the project manager and technical lead for Siemens team in a large infrastructure project.

Dr. Laith research interest areas are focusing on, telecommunications wireless and mobile communications, 5G and beyond technologies and applications, IoT, cyber security, network engineering, network security, emergent technologies, digital transformation, and video streaming. Dr Laith is also interested in the digital entrepreneurship and human developments.

Since 2009, he founded, chaired and organised 17 international conferences and he is Editor and Guest Editor of four journals.

